

New job site : <http://jobs.euractiv.com>

On 16th of June, EurActiv launched its new jobsite dedicated to European affairs <http://jobs.euractiv.com>. This new site is a supplementary service to meet the expectations of EurActiv's 334,000 readers (professionals in European policies).

The concept of EurActiv.com is based on the "Community of European Actors": a professional sphere of approximately 100.000 professionals who work exclusively on European affairs and up to 500.000 including part-time "European Actors". This community has become a very attractive work force due to the specialist profiles required. This trend is growing even more since the enlargement of the EU and the inability of national jobsites and media to meet this growing need.

This job section will facilitate access to jobs opportunities put online by the institutions, organisations, European federations, media, political parties, consulting/law firms, NGO's, think tanks and corporations. These job offers will not be limited to only Brussels, but will include other European countries. This service is currently free and EurActiv will soon offer attractive communication services in order to increase the visibility of job advertisers. The job section also proposes a link to the Education Section of the « Yellow Pages » of EurActiv.com.

ETI – European Training Institute – has been established in Brussels since 1996. The true added-value of ETI lies in the faculty's 100 high-level EU Public Affairs professionals who work on a practical, case-study methodology providing useful real-life answers to (important) real-life questions. ETI has already positioned itself as a sponsor of EurActiv's jobsite. Daniel Guéguen, Executive Chairman declared: "ETI uses the services of the EU jobs section simply because all applicants searching for EU related positions will inevitably explore Euractiv."
